

ABSTRACT

Systems and techniques are described for increasing business productivity and customer satisfaction. One technique includes identifying and making an inventory of touchpoints, and identifying and validating projects, based upon the inventory of touchpoints. The projects are then prioritized based on an analysis of critical customer requirements and overall financial impact, and rigorously executed. The technique further includes measuring increases in productivity and customer satisfaction.